

April 18, 2014

You'll Want to Hoard These Hotel Goodies

By Emily Farra

We're the first to admit that testing out (and taking home) a hotel's bath products is one of life's most underrated luxuries (bonus points for chic packaging). The Mark Hotel on New York's Upper East Side totally gets where we're coming from, and its newest bathroom amenities are some of the cutest we've seen yet. (We suggest ringing housekeeping and stocking up on an extra set or two as souvenirs—just don't tell them Style.com sent you.) The hotel called on Richard Pandiscio (a man known for reinvigorating real estate) and French illustrator Jean-Philippe Delhomme to create cheeky cartoons for the labels on these travel-size toiletries. For example, the bath gel depicts a man reading the newspaper mid-soak, while the shampoo bottle is decorated with a woman washing her dog. As if the hotel's 24-hour access to Bergdorf Goodman wasn't enough to get us through the door.